The Internet as modern form of communication – criticism and defense

Abstract: Problems of this article hovers around criticism and defense of one of the most powerful media - Internet. The author creates the list of positive features which could make life easier for people in all areas of their existence, as well as the list of the risks which entails unlimited availability of the network, including Internet addiction. The intention of the author is not a direct support either the critics or the defenders of the Internet but outlining its positive and negative effects on humans, in order to make the individual using this infinite source of information in a reasonable way. Nowadays, each of us is aware of the fact that today people's life without the Internet is not possible.

AROUND THE PEDAGOGICAL THOUGHT

Piotr Mosiek

Patriotism towards localness and social activity – educational redefinition

Abstract: In the view of the progressive process of globalisation and transformation of national societies it is crucial to redefine the idea of patriotism and humans' sociocultural identity. Contemporary patriotism ought to particularly emphasise the responsibility for closer and wider community cohesion, excluding nobody. On the one hand its cross-cultural character has to concentrate its attention on promoting tolerance and unity amongst citizens who belong to different national groups, conversely – it should form attitudes of responsibilities for the nearest environment, its improvement and constant modernisation. A special role in this task falls to school and its realisation of citizenship education free both of nationalism and relativism; superficiality and sociocultural hermeticism.

Malgorzata Kaliszewska

Zofia Napiórkowska's inspirations with Freinet

Abstract: The biography of Zofia Napiórkowska, the leader of the Freinet movement in Poland (years 1988-2003) shows a lifelong professional development, fields of activity, as well as the values of intergenerational cooperation within the association. Cogitation on the course of life of a distinguished teacher can be a source of inspiration for young teachers in the process of planning their own development, where individual ambition should coexist with the need to implement community goals.

ENVIRONMENT & EDUCATION

Anna Janowicz

Parish as a source of support for dependent people from the perspective of social involvement and volunteering

Abstract: In recent years volunteering is the term used quite often, both in media reports as well as in publications in various fields, including pedagogy and social work. It is still insufficiently used tool of social activation and the prevention of different kinds of problems or deficiencies. There are many possibilities to be a volunteer. The most valuable form of volunteering is regular, permanent helping. In such form that activity special training, coordination and support for volunteers are needed. Volunteer involvement is an essential part of societies, local communities and communities of faith, which, in Polish reality, are mainly associated with the Catholic Church. One of the initiatives, which uses the potential of parish community and volunteering, is a project led by the Department of Social Work of Nicolaus Copernicus University in Toruń and Caritas of the Diocese of Torun since 2014. Based on the best practices of palliative- hospice care educational program for volunteer coordinators of the parish was prepared in order to create centers of intergenerational integration and volunteering in local communities. On the one hand the centers have to respond to the needs of seniors who want to spend their time actively. At the same time an important element of the project is the support of dependent people, the elderly and the sick in their homes. Such activation of the parish community in this area of informal care seems to be an important part of actions, responding to the needs of an aging population.

Key words: volunteering, old people, chronically ill people, parish, community involvement

“School” preparing seniors to play the role of grandparents

Abstract: SuperGrandma and SuperGrandpa school is a very good way to stimulate the elderly and intergenerational integration. Participation in classes provides seniors with valuable knowledge and practical skills on how to work with children. Children and grandchildren can gain much as well. They receive support, excellent playmates and caregivers who take care of their widely understood development. This project encourages the elderly to use their potential, to be active in many fields, gives them a sense of belonging, of being needed and helping to find themselves in a constantly changing reality.

Key words: SuperGrandma and SuperGrandpa school, human needs, grandparents, grandchildren, education, cooperation
